Durable growth

We invest in distinctive industry leaders.

We seek to invest in top-tier businesses with unique competitive advantages that we believe will help them outperform over the long term. We look for dominant companies who are market leaders, can outgrow competitors, and who are not impacted by cyclical. Over an average holding period, this target has the potential to transform compounded free cash flow into wealth for investors. Barriers to entry, intellectual property and high customer switching fees are examples of competitive moats that can help sustain the likelihood of relative outperformance.

Concentrated conviction

We pursue a small number of great companies.

With an extremely selective stock-picking process that aims to deliver growth while minimizing volatility, the Mackenzie Bluewater Team invests in a very small number of companies by “screening in” proven drivers of long-term performance and “screening out” specific risk factors. We look for:

- Growing and sustainable free cash flow.
- Organic growth at faster rates than the economy.
- Industries that are less cyclical.
- Businesses that are less capital intensive.

Few companies have the qualities we seek. Once a company is on our shortlist, it rarely leaves. The main thing that pushes us in and out is valuations.

Macro mindset

We seek stable growth in a changing world.

In a changing world, industry disruptors are a very real danger for investors, as well as political or socio-economic events, trends and factors that could negatively impact regions, sectors, industries and/or individual companies.

At Mackenzie Bluewater, we take a broad-based, macroeconomic view of the global economy to identify long-term risks and opportunities. This analysis has led to forward-thinking outlooks on topics such as the nature of recessions and the replacement of fossil fuels with alternative energy, paving the way towards identifying future investment opportunities for investors and avoiding areas with structural risk.
